An Epic Day

Last week, Mary and Tom went for a hike in the morning. On their way down the mountain, they decided to spend the afternoon at Happy Country Park.

However, a problem hit them. They didn't know how to get to the country park. Fortunately, they met a hiker named Enoch. "Excuse me. How far is it from here to Happy Country Park?" asked Mary. Enoch replied patiently, "It's a long way. It's ten kilometres. You can take a bus there." "Thanks," said Mary.

Tom and Mary arrived at the bus stop. But there was another problem: none of the buses were coming, so there were tons of people waiting there. The queue was as long as a snake. "Aw, man! I hate waiting for such a long time. To make matters worse, no buses are even coming!" mumbled Mary. "Let's take a taxi then," said Tom, "It's as comfortable as a sofa." "No way! Although travelling by taxi is comfortable, it's expensive," protested Mary. "But that's the only transport to Happy Country Park," said Tom. Mary could not argue with that, so she said, "Alright, let's take the taxi then." So Tom called a taxi and the driver of the taxi drove them to the country park.

During their way to Happy Country Park, the driver saw a puppy sitting on the road in front of his taxi. He quickly turned his car to the right and just barely missed the puppy. "Phew! That was close," thought Mary, who was sitting at the back with Tom.

In the end, Mary and Tom arrived at Happy Country Park and had a great time. They felt very joyful. They learned that they should plan carefully before they get going.
