Trip in a Country Park

One morning, Mary met up with Tom and planned to go to Kowloon Country Park, which was the nearest to Tom's home. They packed their backpacks then started their journey.

After a while, Tom and Mary arrived at Kowloon Country Park on foot. They took pictures of lovely animals and plants when wandering around in the country park. Hours felt like minutes for two of them.

When the sky started to turn dark, they were finally leaving. However, they realized that they could not find their way out. None of them found any exits.

All of a sudden, Tom and Mary saw a person passing by. That was perfect! They could ask for help. Tom raced to the hiker. "Excuse me, do you know where the exit of this country park is located?" he asked. The nice hiker thought carefully and replied, "I recommend the bus but it's a long way." He pointed to a direction. "It's ten kilometers if you walk from here to the bus stop," he added.

After Tom and Mary thanked the friendly hiker, they reached the bus stop. Mary spoke up, "The queue is as long as a dragon! Are you sure we're taking the bus?" "Probably not. How about taxi? It's comfortable!" John suggested. Mary agreed to what John said, calling a taxi nearby at the same time.

After a whole day trip, both of them went back to their home. They noticed that it is necessary to ask someone for help when needed. Maybe that was their lesson learnt!
