My Dream Job

People have asked me what I wish to be when I grow up. I always tell them that my dream job is to be a painter. Its job style is what I like. Furthermore, I have been learning to draw since I was eight. It would be easier for me to work as pianist since I already have certain experience to draw.

If I really become one, I would immediately go around the world with my so-called “friend” – a simple sketchbook. The Colosseum, Eiffel Tower or even other landmarks would all be captured into it. Apart from that, I would like to share my techniques with kids or tell them what I saw and heard when I become a painter. I might become an art teacher some day! Besides, kids should know how relaxing it is to be a painter.

However, being a painter is not as easy as it looks like. First, you need to be patient so that you can finish your piece of art more efficiently. Also, it makes sure you don’t give up drawing halfway. Second, you have to be creative. You do not want yourself to scribble rigid shapes only, don’t you? Finally, you must learn to observe anything around yourself. Sometimes you might meet complex items. In this case, you observe it so that you draw the correct details of the item.

At last, I think I am suitable for this job because I am patient and creative as mentioned. Since I have the patience already, I will try to think out of the box more often when creating.
