How to behave well in public places?

It is important to have good manners in public places. Good manners are very essential in life as they help us to behave well in the society.

First, we should have good manners in the museums. We should keep our voices low to avoid disturbing others because keeping voices low in museums is primarily to preserve the quiet viewing atmosphere for others to focus on the exhibits and to avoid disrupting the solemn or contemplative vibe that museums aim to create. We should keep facilities clean and tidy because keeping a museum clean and tidy is essential to preserve the collections from damage caused by dust and pests, enhance the visitors' experience by creating a welcoming and comfortable environment. We shouldn't touch or break anything in the museum because human touch introduces invisible oil, acids and dirt that can cause permanent stains, corrosion and abrasion, while physical contact can lead to scratches, breakage and overall cumulative damage over time. We shouldn't use flash photography to take photos because flash photography is prohibited in museums to prevent damage to delicate artifacts, as the intense light and UV radiation from flashes can cause colours to fade and materials to degrade over time.

In the ice-skating rinks, we should also behave well. We should wear ice-skates because the sharp metal blades are essential for gliding on ice and the hard boots provide ankle support to prevent injury. We should skate with a slower speed because skating slowly is safer in public rinks to prevent collisions. We shouldn't kick people or push each other because it's dangerous and can cause serious injuries. We shouldn't skate the wrong way in an ice-skating rink to prevent collisions and injuries.

To sum up, good manners are very important to our lives. Now, you understand why people in society need to follow rules and obey the law. From today, let's change the bad habits together!
