An Emotional Rollercoaster

Last Sunday, Tom and Mary decided to go outdoor hiking because it was a nice and warm day. ‘Let’s go to Sai Kung Country Park, it will be a nice time there,’ Tom said. Mary replied, ‘I agree, let’s go.’ After that, they set off to the country park.

This was their first time hiking so they had to ask a local for directions. Mary asked, ‘How far is it from here to the bus stop?’ The local replied, ‘It’s a long way. It is ten kilometres.’ Mary questioned again, ‘How long does it take to get there?’ The local replied, ‘It takes one hour and thirty minutes.’ Since the bus was quite cheap, they had no other choice but to endure the ‘pain’.

Eventually, they arrived at the bus stop. They saw the queue was as long as a snake. Tom immediately suggested taking a taxi. Mary agreed with him to take a taxi and ‘vroom’ in a blink of an eye, they arrived at the destination. The taxi driver asked politely, ‘One hundred and fifty dollars, please.’ In that exact moment, they both asked each other, ‘Did you bring money?’ After a silent moment, they realized that they had forgotten to bring their wallets. Fortunately, the taxi driver was generous and let them go.

By the time arrived, they were already exhausted. They were also very embarrassed for the ‘incident’ but at least they had learnt their lesson that they need to always make sure they have brought all of their belongings before hiking again.
